The toponym "Fenyuan" originated around the Guangxu period in 19th century. According to a legend, some people planted tobacco here in the Qing Dynasty (the sound of tobacco in Taiwanese is "fen" (芬) or "fumigation" (薰, similar to the name of "Fenyuan".) so the place name after this.

The Fenyuan Township Office building, is completed around 1935, is a typical administrative architecture in Japanese colonial period.

It features a brick construction and preserves architectural elements from the Showa era, representing historical and architectural significance.
