

📍 Yong'an Wetland

Once a former salt field in Wushulin, the area has been transformed into a vital ecological wetland featuring expansive mangrove forests and diverse waterbird habitats. It serves as an essential stopover for migratory birds traveling between north and south, especially during the autumn and winter months when rare species like black-faced spoonbills and egrets visit in large numbers. Visitors can stroll along wooden boardwalks to closely observe the rich ecology and intertidal landscapes. In addition to its ecological value, the wetland also plays a role in flood mitigation, making it an ideal location that integrates education, conservation, recreation, and natural heritage—reflecting the harmonious coexistence of nature and culture in Yong'an.

Wushulin Salt Production Company Model Village

Located in Yong'an, the Wushulin Salt Field became one of Taiwan's six major salt production sites during the Japanese colonial period. It belonged to the Wushulin Salt Production Company, established by Chen Zhonghe, then the wealthiest man in Kaohsiung. Built in 1919, the main structure is a two-story Western-style building. Its gable roof is adorned with a crest combining spiral and leaf motifs—serving as the emblem of the Wushulin company. On either side of the building are warehouses and dormitories, collectively bearing witness to the rise and decline of Kaohsiung's salt industry.

📍 Yantian Painted Village

Located just across the road from Yong'an Wetland, this village preserves rows of traditional Minnan-style buildings. The rustic red-brick houses enhance the rural charm of the area. In collaboration with Tung Fang Design University, the Yong'an District Office initiated a community revitalization project based on the themes of "Sustainability, Local Identity, and Renewal." Through mural art, these old houses were transformed, breathing new life into the village. The murals incorporate elements such as salt workers, Taiwanese folk culture, and groupers—scenes unique to Yong'an. Visitors can experience the salt village's cultural past, where the charm of old times blends with blue skies and wetland landscapes, creating a nostalgic and artistic street scene.

📍 Weixin Painted Village

Weixin Village is the most populous neighborhood in Yong'an District, where old and new houses coexist. The mural art decorating the building walls primarily features animals, such as a cute big dog, shark, and a groundhog eating peanuts. Using 3D painting techniques, these artworks create immersive scenes that interact with visitors, making them feel as if they've stepped into the paintings themselves.

📍 Wulintou Trail

The Wulintou Trail offers a panoramic view of the power plant pier and the ring-shaped bay formed by numerous wave breakers, known locally as "Ring Bay." When the sunlight reflects off the ocean surface, it sparkles like diamonds—simply stunning. Following the trail down from the viewing platform, visitors can enjoy walking along the shore, splashing in the waves, or playing in the sand. At night, the spot transforms into a romantic setting, perfect for moon gazing and stargazing.

📍 Wulintou Xuande Temple

Located along the coast of Xingang Village, this temple is a local spiritual center renowned for its devotion to the Earth God ("Tudi Gong"). It is affectionately known as the "Instant Noodle Earth God Temple" because worshippers often offer instant noodles, which are left at the temple for visitors to enjoy freely. Though small in size, the temple is always lively with incense and prayer. Visitors can not only pray for peace and blessings but also take a stroll along the scenic Wulintou Trail just behind the temple, with stunning ocean views.

📍 Tadishan Nature Park

Tadishan Nature Park is the coastal area of Kaohsiung where badland terrain comes closest to the sea. Its exposed ridgelines and barren gullies create a stark, unique landscape that blends geological features with natural ecology. Once a military base during the Japanese colonial period, it has since been transformed into a nature park. Walking along its trails reveals spectacular views of the Taiwan Strait and varying angles of the badlands terrain. At the summit, visitors will find a converted military bunker that now serves as a lookout, along with a 360-degree observation deck offering panoramic views of the coastline, birds in flight, and both Small and Big Gangshan mountains. Sunset is an especially popular time for photography. Along the way, you'll encounter coral reef rocks, dry streambeds, and wild plants, making this an excellent site for geological education and nature exploration, as well as a symbol of Mituo's natural and ecological value.

📍 Wu Family Traditional Courtyard House

Among the traditional sanheyuan (three-section courtyard houses) in Mituo, the Wu Family Residence is the most iconic, known for its historical and cultural significance. This over-a-century-old residence features a "three-hall, two-courtyard" layout in a 日-shaped (sun-shaped) configuration, typical of southern Taiwanese siheyuan architecture. The main hall is at the center, with rooms arranged by generation from left to right and front to back—divided into the front, middle, and rear sections, along with left and right side wings (hulong).
